Elder Building Opening

By Debbie Preston

The Nisqually Indian Tribe celebrated the "soft" opening of the 20,000 -square-foot, $15 million Elders Center on April 25 to provide comprehensive health, nutritional, and social services to the tribal elders residing on the Nisqually reservation and within the tribal service area of Thurston and Pierce counties.

The new center is located next to the new Health and Wellness Center and is across from the just-underway construction of Nisqually Elder's Village of 10 homes created with elders in mind. Another 10 will be added in coming years.

The Elder's Center targets those 55 years old and older, serving at least 200 elders, including those from other tribes on the reservation. They also host other tribal elder events and will be able to host larger gatherings with the new facility.

Services provided include:

Senior nutrition services, health screening/monitoring services, physical therapy/exercise area and the important aspect of socialization, particularly as people are once again able to gather together.

The facility includes offices for program staff, a day use activity and socialization area, rooms for health screening, physical therapy, and health consultation, an exercise room, a space for intergenerational activities, and a large meeting area for events.

A drone shot shows the new facility and the proximity to the Nisqually Health and Wellness Center and other housing. The Elders Village, just underway, will be 10 Elder's houses, specified by elder in put and ADA compliant, also with solar panels, located just out of the picture off the right corner. Nisqually Indian Tribe Community Notice BIA/Tribal Transportation Plan

The Nisqually Tribe, working with Red Plains Transportation Consultants, has completed an update of the BIA funded Tribal Transportation Plan and Road Inventory (IRR).

The plan and inventory identify a list of prioritized projects to support the Tribal Transportation Improvement Program, and is required in order for the Tribe to spend BIA transportation dollars.

The plan has been reviewed internally, and is ready for submission to Tribal Council.

The Transportation Plan and Road Inventory are available for review within the Tribal Planning Department offices in the Tribal Admin building.

Tribal members wanting to review the plan and inventory, or discuss tribal transportation plans and issues, can stop by the Tribal Planning Department and ask for either Joe Cushman or Heidi Thomas. Phone Number: 360-456-5221, or 360-480-0536.

Please stop in and say hi.

Council Corner Wellness and Recovery/Drug Task Force Update

Guido Levy, 6th Council Member

Hello everyone,

As we now enter May, wanted to update you regarding the Nisqually Indian Tribe. The health and safety of our community is a priority for myself and others on council. That resulted in resolution 37-2022 passing to end drug use on the reservation.

Is that an impossible goal? That isn't how we are looking at it. The Nisqually Drug Task Force/Wellness and Recovery was created as a result of the resolution. We are creating positive momentum to make big changes.

Here at Nisqually, we already have paths for recovery. In our Corrections facility there is a small "step down" facility within the building and tribal members are prioritized. After going through detox, those in recovery have two more steps with increasing involvement with recovery services, medically assisted treatment and privileges. When released, they are not thrown out the door, but connected to all the services they will need when they leave.

In our Behavioral Health Department, recovery medications are available as part of the carousel of services for those in recovery. In the near future, tiny homes will become available at Brighton Creek, where extended involvement in wellness activities will be a part of extended recovery.

We know drugs do not discriminate against any population which makes the Nisqually Healing Center planned for Olympia on Pacific Avenue a logical step to holistically treat both tribal and non-tribal people. The Medically Assisted Treatment (MAT) clinic, when fully operational, (early 2025) will serve up to 500 tribal and non-tribal clients per day from the Thurston County area.

The clinic will provide substance use disorder assessments, individual and group counseling, medication including Methadone, Suboxone, Subutex and Vivitrol, mental health counseling, primary medical care, dental services, case management, psychiatric medication management, recovery support, and related services. One of the goals with this clinic is to eliminate barriers that would hinder people from seeking help. The clinic would offer transportation and child watch services.

It has repeatedly been shown that those who are in treatment falter when required to manage referrals themselves rather than having them available under one roof. Again, there will be no wrong door and no wrong time. When someone is ready to make a change, the facility will be there for them, even without an appointment.

The cities of Lacey and Olympia are ecstatic that we are taking on some of this work. There are limited facilities offering the kinds of holistic services that Nisqually will provide and get reimbursed for if they are not a Nisqually tribal member. We see the problem in the surrounding communities each day and we know ourselves how these issues damage families and communities.

This is of the upmost importance to Tribal Council and we're going to keep at it for as long as it takes. We'll keep doing updates.

Governor Signs a Bill in Support of Billy Frank Jr. Statue

Washington state Governor Jay Inslee signed a bill the week of May 7 that helps support the effort to create and install the statue of Nisqually activist and statesman Billy Frank Jr. in Statuary Hall in Washington, D.C. With Willie Frank III in Washington, D.C. advocating for salmon just as his father did, relatives Hanford McCloud, Nisqually governmental liaison and weaver and Nisqually 7th Council Leighanna Scott witnessed the signing. Additionally, Arts Washington representative Michael Sweney, the agency helping facilitate the project, and McCloud's son, Aiden and friends witnessed the moment.

The legislation enabling the project was signed by Inslee at Nisqually in 2021. Haiying Wu, the first Chinese - American to have a statue in Statuary Hall, is the artist and the project is tentatively planned for installation in early 2025.

Ft. Steilacoom Park

By Debbie Preston

The Nisqually Tribe and the city of Lakewood Parks and Recreation staff continue to work toward creating interpretive signs at Ft. Steilacoom Park about the Nisqually. The 340-acre park receives over 1 million visitors a year and is in the traditional area of Nisqually. Signs and art will help tell the story of Chief Leschi, the tribe's connection to horses and the prairie areas and the camas plant, a traditional food of most tribes in western Washington.

Kevin Moore, Director of Nisqually Youth Services; Cynthia Iyall, Nisqually Tribal Administrator, and Mary Dodsworth discuss the places around Waughop Lake that would be ideal for art and other interpretive materials in Ft. Steilacoom Park. Visits continue with discussion about the best places to place interpretive materials and what the topics would be, including QR codes that would take visitors to additional resources.

Mary Dodsworth, Lakewood Parks and Recreation and Community Services Director, talks about the opportunities for art on benches that can help tell the story at several places around the Waughop Lake.

The group pauses at the site of camas flowers. A crew that pulls the invasive Scott's broom regularly surely helps maintain this beautiful camas and Garry oak prairie.

WSSDA Regional Meeting

Hanford McCloud presents the model the Nisqually Tribe and North Thurston School District have created along with the school board to other assembled members of the Washington State School Directors Association (WSSDA) regional meeting.

Formed in 1922, WSSDA's membership consists of the entirety of Washington's 1,477 locally elected school board directors. As a state agency, WSSDA supports its members with research-based leadership development resources, policy and legal guidance, and legislative advocacy. This work is of critical importance because school board directors build the future of public education by setting the policy, governance, and budgetary priorities for all of Washington's 295 school districts serving over 1.1 million students.

MMIWP Conference at the Nisqually Youth Center

By Debbie Preston

The Nisqually Tribe hosted the 4th annual Protecting Our Sovereignty Tribal Summit today, May 4, discussing the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) in which tribes have the choice to apply for jurisdiction when a non-native person commits a crime of domestic violence on their reservation.

Additionally, recent legislation regarding the alert system for Missing and Murdered Indian Women and People was discussed, including success stories and ways to improve response. Preventing human trafficking and child sexual exploitation in partnership with other law enforcement entities was also discussed. Look for a shift to August for this conference next year.

This annual event is fully funded and facilitated by the non-profit Washington Indian Civil Rights Commission. They are one of the recipients of Nisqually's charitable funds and currently have a Nisqually tribal elder and a staff member on their board. They've held a summit/conference for about 4 years now, pre-Covid. The main purpose of the summit is to bring local, state, federal and tribal authorities together to discuss changes to our judicial system and the efforts to make even more changes, i.e. sex offenders, human trafficking, prosecuting of non-Indians and MMIP are just a few of the topics. This next one hopefully will be two days with more entities involved. The more involvement, the more prevention.

The next summit will be announced soon, with dates for registration a few months ahead of time. Participation from anyone that can make it is welcome and needed.

By Debbie Preston

The newest officer at the Nisqually Corrections facility is likely to greet you with a kiss – a dog kiss.

Sgt. Mark Upton of Nisqually Corrections is the first officer in the corrections division to train a dog for duty inside the corrections facility.

The 10-week old Dutch Shepherd and Dutch Malinois cross will be in his socialization and obedience training for six to eight months and then begin his 240-hour narcotic detection training.

The Nisqually Corrections facility, like all agencies in the area, is experiencing nearly an overdose a month from fentanyl. Because it can come in nearly undetectable amounts, it is being smuggled into facilities and causing overdoses nationwide.

The dogs are trained to alert from a distance so as not to overdose themselves. Officers carry narcan specifically for their dogs as a precaution. Detection will be his only job, but he is certainly the most popular officer on the Nisqually campus right now.

"We welcome Draco to our Nisqually family," said Chairman Willie Frank III. "The more tools we have to prevent overdoses and drugs in our facility, the better chance we have of turning lives around and using our step-down treatment facility there to get folks on the road to recovery."

Purchaser is responsible for obtaining a ground lease from Tribe.

Permitting: Ensuring Structures are Safe

By Jessie Fox, Executive Assistant, Building Department

Since its inception in 2019, the Building Department set its sights on creating and implementing a Permitting Department. On December 2, 2021, this dream was realized when Title 54, giving the Building Department authority over building codes, was passed as a resolution by the Nisqually Tribal Council. With the creation of this new department, a full-time Permitting Manager and Building Inspector were needed to implement and enforce the codes, statutes, and regulations required for such an undertaking. In April 2023 the Building Department was excited to welcome Jen Elliott as the new Tribal Permitting Manager, and Ryan Kalich as the Tribal Building Inspector.

A building permit is an official approval issued by the local government agency that allows you or your contractor to proceed with a construction or remodeling project on your property. Permitting is intended to ensure that the project plans comply with local standards for land use, zoning, and construction. The permit process is more than just procedure and paperwork – it's a way to ensure structures are safe for you and the people you love.

In general, you need a building permit to change the occupancy of, construct, enlarge, alter, repair, move, or demolish a building or structure. Specific issues that the building permit process may address include structural integrity of the framing work, zoning, sanitation, water, and sewer lines, fire protection, and electrical service. Working hand in hand with permits, Inspectors, such as Ryan, make sure buildings comply with important building codes, including checking the foundation, framing, insulation, roofing, plumbing, door locks, sheetrock, and grading.

The permits also help ensure that people build correctly in environmentally sensitive or hazardous areas – such as floodplains – and comply with land-use and zoning plans that preserve the quality of life here on the Reservation. Proper permitting helps protect property values. Because Permit review is not only a legal issue, but a financial one as well, property insurers often refuse to cover damage caused by work done without permits and inspections. Likewise, banks will often decline to finance a purchase without proof of a final inspection. Proceeding with a project without a permit may mean that the project will ultimately have to be removed or remedied somehow -- and that costs money. So, before a project is started, see if a permit is required.

Permits are needed for any business and personal structure located on our Tribal lands. Information regarding permitting can be found on the Nisqually Indian Tribe Home Page where Printable Permitting Forms will soon be available for download. These forms, once they have been completed, will need to be returned through either email, the US Postal Service, or in person to Jen Elliott at the Nisqually Building Department located at 12565 Elders Lane SE.

Jen Elliott and Ryan Kalich are not only assets to the Building Department, but the go to experts if you have any questions regarding permits and inspections. They can be found at the above address or out working in the community. They can be reached by email at elliott.jennifer@nisqually-nsn.gov and kalich.ryan@nisqually-nsn.gov and by phone at 360.456.5221. Jen's extension is 1366 and Ryan's is 1231.

Puget Sound Day on the Hill

By Debbie Preston

Tribal, state and non-government agency leaders participate each year in Puget Sound Day on the Hill to focus federal leadership in Washington, D.C. on the urgent needs of Puget Sound to achieve recovery to support healthy salmon runs and orca populations as well as humans. Nisqually Chairman Willie Frank III participated as part of tribal leadership, including on a panel "It Takes an Estuary." Nisqually is also a lead on the issue of the chemicals that come from tire dust, reacts with ozone in the atmosphere, resulting in death to salmon before they can spawn. Tribes have created a coalition to try to get the chemical changed or removed from tires.

Puget Sound Day on the Hill involves tribes, local and state government and non-governmental agencies and concerned citizens presenting a united front on issues related to Puget Sound.

Rodney Thomas

Nisqually tribal member and now Police Officer Rodney Thomas accepted a certificate of recognition for completing the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center requirements to become an officer.

Corrections Officer nab wanted person

Nisqually Corrections Officer Ashley Cook accepts her recognition for assisting in the capture of a man who attempted to kidnap a minor on a city bus. She and Corrections Officer Justin Hurley looked at pictures that Olympia law enforcement was circulating to try to identify the man and each of them recognized him from prior incarceration. Their identification allowed for his apprehension.

Caught on Camera?

Tips from the IT-WebDev Department

Some folks may remember a TV Show called Candid Camera or even more recently, Impractical Jokers. These shows set up hidden cameras to capture funny moments or comedic tricks on unsuspecting victims. Today's cameras are sometimes "hidden" all around us, from our home Amazon Blink or Ring cameras, computer or phone cameras, cameras mounted in our automobiles or at traffic lights, on speed limit signs or at toll booths; we may never realize when we're being observed or recorded.

In previous Squalli-Absch newsletters, we've covered types of Web cameras (and audio systems) to consider when using with a computer or other smart technology devices. This article focuses on the complexities and perhaps even potential legalities of technological cameras and their usage.

Almost all public shopping areas and public locations where there are large gatherings of people, have some form of camera security system installed. Audio surveillance laws differ from state to state, so it is important to be familiar with state laws and what is required before being recorded. When considering audio surveillance laws by state, most states have specific laws that govern the use of electronic recording of conversations of any kind. Users must ensure that they follow the laws of their state before employing such devices. Audio surveillance at work is legal if recorded parties are aware of it and consent to it. In 12 states, all-parties consent is required for a conversation to be recorded. In 38 states, audio can be recorded if at least one person is aware of it (one-party consent). Note however posting signage of recording does not constitute "consent," implied or express. Posting signs will not excuse unlawful video or audio interception or recording and in almost all cases, employers must disclose their video surveillance policy to employees, including the location of all security cameras. Tesla, the automotive manufacturer, is recently facing a class-action complaint after it was revealed that employees used an internal messaging system to share sensitive videos and images of customers taken by car cameras.

PRIVACY SECURITY TIPS:

- A hacker can take control of a smart television by changing channels, adjusting volume levels, and even showing inappropriate content to children. At worst, they can turn on a TV's camera and microphone to spy on and listen to conversations.
- An iphone feature added in 2020 will display a green light to alert use of the phone's camera and microphone by another application.

Editor's note: I recently caught my young grand-nephews breaking out a kitchen window to our house on our home security cameras (accidentally playing but it was done with malicious intent). Gone, perhaps, are the days where one might run and hide and never be caught or held accountable for one's actions. Within the past two years in our neighborhood, we experienced a shooting involving teenagers; the local city police department went door to door asking for surveillance footage from home cameras to help identify the suspect and further investigate the incident.

Nisqually Language South Worth Elementary

By Catalina Sanchez

Nisqually Language department says farewell to our awesome 5th Graders.

Nisqually Language department raises their hands to our kids at Southworth Elementary, as one of the first schools to start learning Southern Lushootseed. The students at Southworth have learned so much this year. We spent most of the year learning the alphabet, animals, numbers and much more.

As a farewell gift, we gave each student copies of our Nisqually books. May was the last month we served Yelm School District, but we look forward to coming back this fall to start a new round of language classes.

Please remember to sign up for the Native American Education program to start Language classes right away. Liz Satiacum is the program coordinator for Yelm School District. When registering for the school year make sure you visit with Liz to sign up.

All our students did great this year, here is more clips of our Kindergarten to Fourth Grade students. We hope to see you all next year have a great summer. Great job and congrats!
